

Woman M.A. Sells Matches

SYDNEY. — Mrs. Joan Agnew, who is a Master of Arts of London University, is selling matches in a single-window kiosk in Pitt street.

"I'd rather be doing something for the war effort than selling book matches at 1½d. for two packets," says Mrs. Agnew.

"I've offered my services to various Government departments, but apparently my qualifications aren't good enough.

"At Vienna I was able to have interesting discussions with informed people on Nietzsche.

"In the past few months my most intelligent contribution to a discussion has been 'No, we have no cigarettes.'"
